AN IMPERFECT THANKSGIVING IS A HAPPY THANKSGIVING

Most cooks don't expect a perfect turkey day after all, Butterball survey shows

Garner, N.C. (November 1, 2017) – Very few things in life are Pinterest perfect. Butterball knows Thanksgiving's no different. But with all the things that could go wrong, we're here to help make sure the turkey always goes right. Your Thanksgiving may not be picture perfect, but cooking your turkey should be stress-free.

Butterball conducted a consumer survey for a pulse on Thanksgiving preppers' expectations and realities when it comes to one of the most important meals of the year, and found:

- ONE FOR THE BOOKS: Two-thirds of Americans rank Thanksgiving as one of their favorite holidays.
- CHANGING WITH THE TIMES: Two-thirds of Americans like to incorporate new traditions into their celebrations...many of which include cooking up new and different recipes for loved ones to enjoy.
- ...EXCEPT FOR THE TURKEY: Out of all things Thanksgiving preparers cook up, they're most proud of the turkey. And 88 percent prep it the old-school way: in an oven.
- IT'S ALL GOOD! 84 percent feel excited about preparing the meal, and 74 percent of Americans don't expect Thanksgiving to be perfect.
- BUT IF THERE'S ONE THING TO NAIL: It's the turkey! Despite the overall positivity around the holiday, first-time millennial preparers are still feeling the pressure. Eight in 10 first-time cooks worry about cooking the turkey correctly. This number drops among experienced preparers, but still 43% worry about getting it right.
- EMOJI PETITION: With two-thirds of the country ranking Thanksgiving as a favorite holiday, the Turkey Talk-Line experts know a perfectly browned, mouth-watering Thanksgiving turkey emoji will help Americans communicate their love of turkey with an emoji. This year, we're rallying support to make the Thanksgiving turkey emoji a reality via Change.org. Sign the petition!

"While we know Thanksgiving can be full of little stresses, we also know it's important to not sweat the small stuff," said Sue Smith, co-director of the Butterball Turkey Talk-Line.
